Non-resident property tax in Spain

What to file, when it is due and how the tax is worked out, in plain English.

Own a home in Spain, but live somewhere else?

Then Spain asks you to file a short tax return for it every year. It is called the Modelo 210, and this guide shows you exactly what applies to you.

The essentials at a glance

- Every non-resident owner files a Modelo 210 each year.
- You always report on the year that has just ended.
- If you do not rent out your home, the return is due by 31 December.
- If you rent it out, the income is reported by 20 January of the following year.
- Homes owned through a company do not pay this tax.

Which one sounds like you?

What you file depends on how you used your home during the year.
Find the case that fits.

01 I do not rent out my property

You file one annual return for non-residents. You report on the previous year, so in 2026 you report and pay the tax for 2025.

You can file and pay at any time during the year, as long as it is done by 31 December.

DUE BY 31 DECEMBER

02 I rent out my property for the whole year

You pay tax on the rental income instead of the property tax. Since tax year 2024 this is reported once a year, rather than every quarter.

The deadline is 20 January of the following year. You can pay yourself, or the tax is collected by direct debit on 31 January.

DUE BY 20 JANUARY

03 I rent out my property for part of the year

You file the annual return for the days the property was not rented out. You also report the rental income for the days it was let, by 20 January of the following year.

TWO PARTS, TWO DEADLINES

04 I bought my property this year

If you do not rent it out, your first return is due next year. If you bought in 2025, for example, your first return is due in 2026. Any rental income is reported by 20 January of the following year.

FIRST RETURN DUE NEXT YEAR

05 I sold my property this year

You still file the annual return, covering the period up to the date you sold. If the home was not rented out, you file it early the following year. Any rental income is reported by 20 January of the following year.

How your tax is worked out

If you do not rent out your home, the tax is based on its official value. You only need three numbers.

Cadastral value

This is the official value of your property, the valor catastral. You will find it on the bill for your local property tax, the IBI.

2% or 1.1%

The 2% rate applies as a rule. It drops to 1.1% if your town has revised its cadastral values within the last 10 years.

19% or 24%

Residents of the EU and EEA, including Norway, pay 19%. Everyone else pays 24%, which includes UK residents since Brexit.

Several owners

The tax is split between the owners. Two owners each pay half, and each one files their own return.

This national tax comes on top of your local IBI, which you keep paying to the town hall as usual.

03 A WORKED EXAMPLE

What it looks like in practice

One owner who lives in Norway has a home that was not rented out. The town has not revised its values in the last 10 years.

Cadastral value This comes from the IBI bill.	€45,986.60
---	------------

Rate applied to the value There has been no recent revision.	2%
--	----

Tax rate The owner lives in the EU/EEA.	19%
---	-----

Days owned The home was owned all year.	365 of 365
---	------------

Tax due for the year	€174.75
-----------------------------	----------------

$$€45,986.60 \times 2\% \times 19\% \times 365/365 = €174.75$$

Good to know if you rent out your home

Rental platforms share your income

Airbnb, Vrbo and similar platforms now report rental income to the Spanish tax office. This includes lets arranged by a local agent through these platforms, so always declare this income.

VAT usually does not apply

Holiday lets are generally exempt from VAT. If you offer hotel-style services such as laundry, meals or regular cleaning, the rental carries 10% VAT.

Subletting changes the picture

If an agent or platform can rent out your home without you under a sublease, the rental counts as commercial and VAT rises to 21%. Many owners have guests pay them directly, so VAT only applies to the platform's fee.

Your costs can be deducted

EU and EEA residents can deduct costs directly linked to the rental, and then pay 19% on the net amount.

Check your home country too

Your home country may also tax this income. Spanish tax you have paid can usually be credited, so keep your proof of payment. Norwegian owners claim this on form RF-1147.

Three dates to keep in mind

20 January

Rental income from the previous year is reported by this date.

31 January

Rental tax is collected on this date if you pay by direct debit.

31 December

The return for homes that are not rented out is due by this date.

If a return is filed late

Filing on time is the easiest route. If a return does slip, coming forward yourself always costs less.

1% to 12%

If you file up to 12 months late of your own accord, a surcharge of 1% to 12% of the tax is added.

15%

If you file more than 12 months late of your own accord, a 15% surcharge is added, plus late-payment interest.

50% or more

If the tax office contacts you first, the penalty is at least 50% of the tax owed, on top of the original bill.
