INTRODUCTION

The one tax every owner in Spain pays

IBI, the Impuesto sobre Bienes Inmuebles, is the yearly tax your town hall charges on property. Residents and non-residents pay it in the same way, whether the home is lived in, let out or empty.

The essentials at a glance

- Whoever owns the home on 1 January pays IBI for the whole year.
- The amount is the cadastral value of your home multiplied by your town's rate.
- Each town sets its own payment window, so dates differ from place to place.
- A late payment adds a surcharge of 5% to 20%, plus interest.
- Unpaid IBI stays tied to the home, so a buyer can end up paying it.

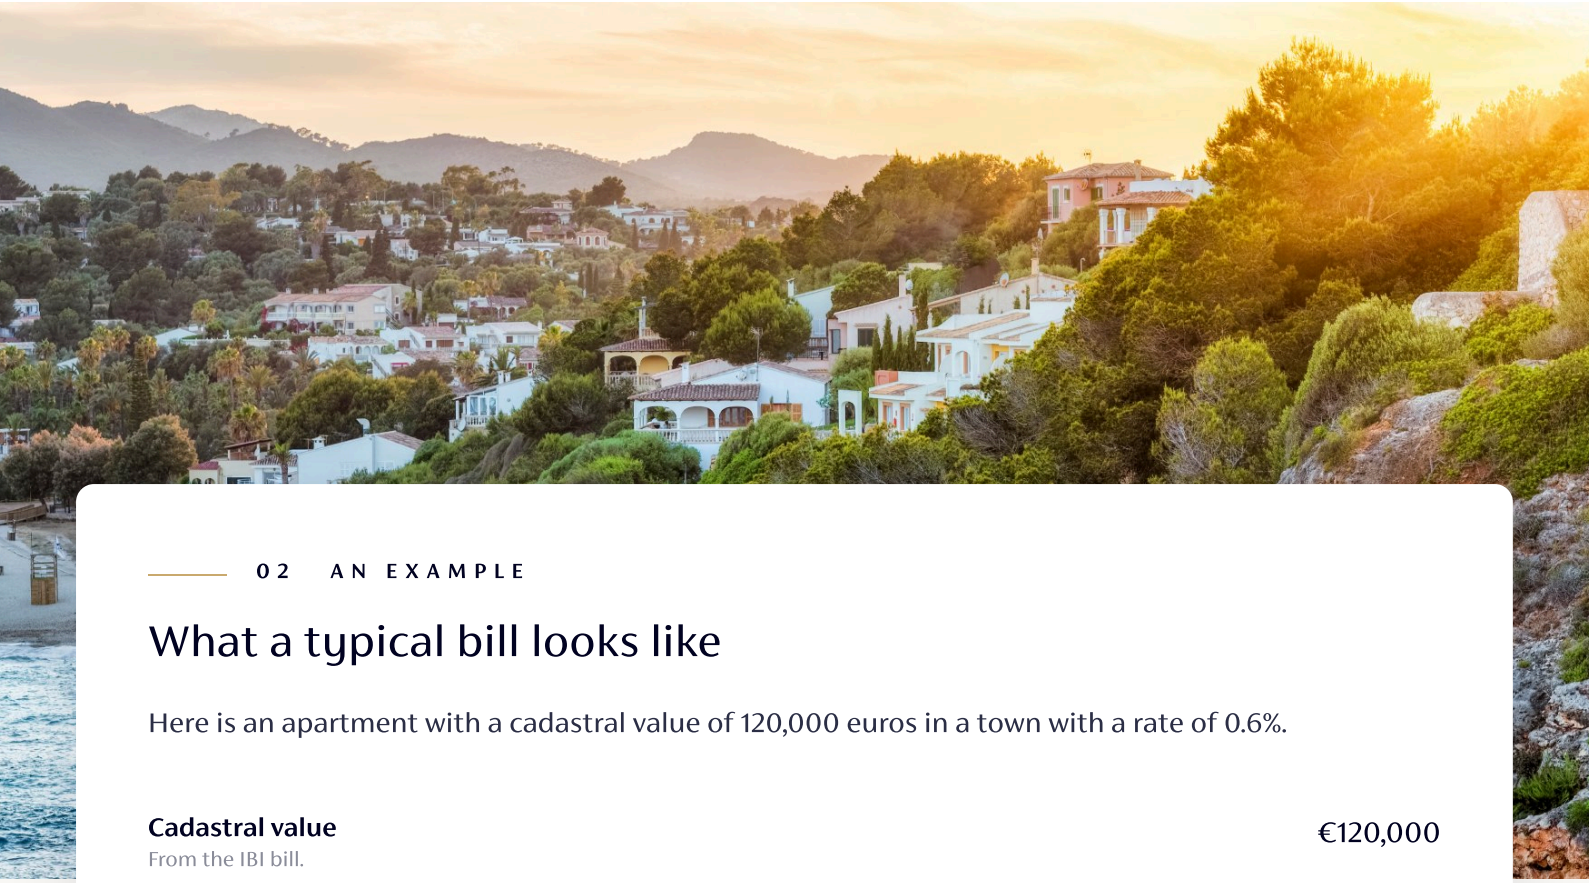

Two numbers decide your bill

Your IBI bill comes from the value the land registry office gives your home and the rate your town hall chooses.

Cadastral value	The valor catastral set by Spain's Catastro. It is usually well below the market price, and you find it on your IBI bill.
Town rate	Each town hall sets its own rate within limits set by national law. For homes it usually falls between 0.4% and 1.1%.
Discounts	Some towns give a small discount for paying by direct debit or for large families. Ask your town hall or its tax office what applies.

The same cadastral value is used for your non-resident tax return, the Modelo 210, so it is worth keeping your latest IBI bill safe.

02 AN EXAMPLE

What a typical bill looks like

Here is an apartment with a cadastral value of 120,000 euros in a town with a rate of 0.6%.

Cadastral value From the IBI bill.	€120,000
Town rate Set by the town hall each year.	0.6%
IBI for the year	€720

€120,000 × 0.6% = €720 for the year.

Paying on time, and what happens if you do not

Many towns pass IBI collection to a provincial tax office, which sends the bill and sets the dates. Your bill tells you who collects it and when.

01 Pay by direct debit

A direct debit from a Spanish account is the easiest way to make sure IBI is paid every year, even when you are not in Spain.

02 A missed payment gets more expensive

Once the payment window closes, a surcharge of 5% applies at first. It rises to 10% and then 20% if the debt is not paid after the formal notice, and interest is added.

03 Unpaid IBI follows the home

If IBI is left unpaid and the home is sold, the new owner can be asked to pay it. Buyers should always ask for proof that recent IBI bills are paid before signing.
