

YOUR GUIDE TO SHORT LETS

Seasonal or holiday letting in Spain

Spain treats a few months' let to a remote worker very differently from a week's let to holidaymakers. Choosing the right one keeps you on the right side of the rules.

INTRODUCTION

Two kinds of short let

A seasonal let is a contract for a tenant who needs the home for a set period, for work or study, without making it their main home. A holiday let is accommodation for tourists, regulated by each region.

The essentials at a glance

- A seasonal let follows the tenancy law and needs a written reason for the stay.
- A holiday let usually needs a licence or registration with your region.
- Since April 2025, a new holiday let in a flat needs the approval of the community of owners.
- Both types of income are declared in Spain on the Modelo 210.
- Some towns limit or pause new holiday licences, so check locally first.

How the two compare

The right choice depends on your building, your region and how much time you want to spend on guests.

Seasonal let	Stays of a few weeks to a few months under a written contract. No tourist licence is needed, but the contract should state the reason, such as work or study.
Holiday let	Short stays for tourists, often with cleaning and fresh linen between guests. It needs a regional licence or registration, and guests must be registered with the authorities.
Your building	For a new holiday let in a flat, three fifths of the owners must approve it at a community meeting.
Tax	Residents of the EU and EEA pay 19% on the net income after deductible costs, declared on the Modelo 210.

Four questions to answer first

A short check now saves a great deal of trouble later.

01 What does your town allow?

Ask the town hall or the regional tourism office whether new holiday licences are being issued in your area.

02 What do the community rules say?

Read the statutes and recent minutes. Some buildings have already voted to limit holiday lets.

03 Who will look after the guests?

Holiday lets need check-ins, cleaning and quick repairs. A seasonal tenant needs much less day-to-day care.

04 Is your insurance right for it?

Tell your insurer how the home is let. Many standard policies do not cover holiday guests.
