

YOUR GUIDE TO BUYING COSTS

The real cost of buying a home in Spain

The price on the listing is not the price you pay. This guide sets out the taxes and fees on top, so you can plan for the full amount.

INTRODUCTION

Plan for more than the price

Buying in Spain comes with taxes and fees that are paid on top of the price. Most of them are set by law or by your region, so they can be worked out before you make an offer.

The essentials at a glance

- A resale home carries a transfer tax set by your region, often between 6% and 10% of the price.
- A new build carries 10% VAT plus a smaller stamp duty set by your region.
- Notary and Land Registry fees follow official scales and depend on the price.
- With a mortgage, the lender pays most of the costs of setting it up.
- If the seller is not resident in Spain, you hold back 3% of the price and pay it to the tax agency.

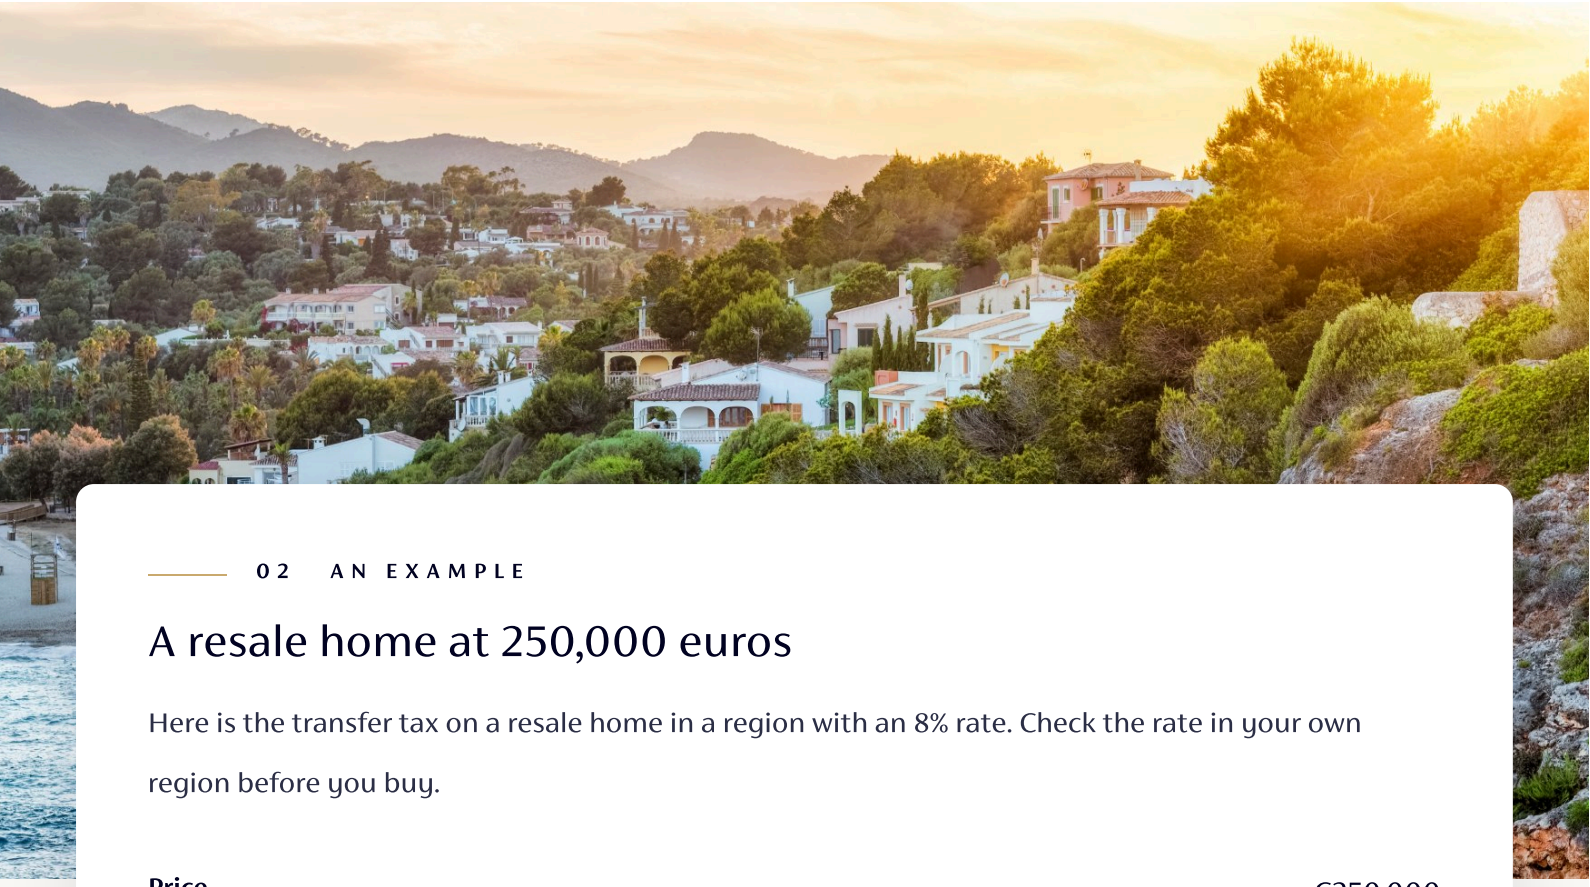

What you pay on top of the price

The biggest cost depends on whether the home is a resale or a new build. The rest applies to both.

Resale: ITP	The Impuesto de Transmisiones Patrimoniales, paid to your region. Each region sets its own rate, and some charge more on expensive homes.
New build: VAT and AJD	10% VAT on the price, paid to the developer, plus a stamp duty, the AJD, set by your region. The Canary Islands use their own tax, the IGIC, instead of VAT.
Notary and registry	The notary who signs the deed and the Land Registry that records it charge by official scales linked to the price.
Legal help	An independent lawyer is not required, but checks the title, debts and permits for you. Agree the fee in writing first.

Since 2019, Spanish law has the lender pay the stamp duty, notary, registry and processing costs of a mortgage. The buyer usually pays only the valuation.

02 AN EXAMPLE

A resale home at 250,000 euros

Here is the transfer tax on a resale home in a region with an 8% rate. Check the rate in your own region before you buy.

Price Agreed with the seller.	€250,000
Transfer tax rate An example rate; each region sets its own.	8%
Transfer tax to pay	€20,000

€250,000 × 8% = €20,000, before notary, registry and legal fees.

The 3% you hold back

When the seller does not live in Spain, the law asks the buyer to keep back 3% of the price and pay it straight to the Agencia Tributaria.

01

It goes to the tax agency, not the seller

The 3% is paid on the Modelo 211 within one month of the sale. It counts towards the seller's tax on any gain.

WITHIN ONE MONTH

02

If it is not paid

If the 3% is not paid, the home stays tied to the seller's tax debt, so the buyer can be asked to pay it later.

03

Paying for the home

The notary checks where the money comes from, so pay from an account in your own name and keep the transfer records.
