INTRODUCTION

Three offices, three kinds of tax

A home in Spain is taxed by the national tax agency, by your town hall and by your region. Each sends its own letters and sets its own dates, which is why owners abroad so often miss something.

The essentials at a glance

- The Agencia Tributaria collects the non-resident tax, filed on the Modelo 210.
- Your town hall, or its provincial office, collects IBI and the plusvalía tax.
- Your region collects the tax on buying a resale home and on inheritance.
- From the 2026 tax year, the imputed income return is filed from 1 April to 31 December of the next year.
- Official letters can be read online, so a missed letter does not have to mean a missed deadline.

The three tax offices for your home

Knowing which office a letter comes from tells you how urgent it is and where to answer.

Agencia Tributaria	The national tax agency. It collects the non-resident income tax on your home, filed on the Modelo 210, and the 3% that a buyer holds back when a non-resident sells.
Town hall	Your ayuntamiento, often through a provincial tax office. It collects IBI every year, the plusvalía tax when a home is sold or inherited, and in many towns a rubbish collection charge.
Your region	The comunidad autónoma. It collects the transfer tax on resale purchases and the inheritance and gift tax, and sets many of their rates.

Official notifications from the Agencia Tributaria can be read on the government's online notice service, the DEHú, once you have a digital certificate or Cl@ve access. It is worth setting up before you need it.

The Modelo 210 dates have changed

A new order from the tax ministry, Orden HAC/623/2026, moves the filing window for the yearly return on a home you do not let out.

1 April 2027

The window opens for the 2026 return on a home you do not let out.

1 to 20 April 2027

Rent received in October, November and December 2026 is declared.

31 December 2027

The last day to file the 2026 return. Direct debit payment closes on 23 December.

If you have missed a year

A late return can still be filed. Filing before the tax agency contacts you keeps the surcharge lower than waiting for a letter.
