Own a home in Spain, but live somewhere else?

Then Spain asks you to file a short tax return for it every year. It is called the Modelo 210, and this guide shows you exactly what applies to you.

The essentials at a glance

- Every non-resident owner files a Modelo 210 each year.
- If you do not rent out your home, last year's return is due by 31 December.
- If you rent it out, the income is reported between 1 and 20 April.

Which one sounds like you?

What you file depends on how you used your home during the year. Find the case that fits.

01 I do not rent out my property

You file one annual return for non-residents. You report on the previous year, so this year you report and pay the tax for last year.

The return for 2025 can be filed at any time until 31 December 2026. From the 2026 return onwards, filing opens on 1 April and still closes on 31 December. To pay by direct debit, file by 23 December.

DUE BY 31 DECEMBER

02 I rent out my property for the whole year

You pay tax on the rental income instead of the property tax. It is reported once a year, covering the whole of the previous year.

The return is due between 1 and 20 April. You can pay it yourself, or pay by direct debit if you file by 15 April.

1 TO 20 APRIL

03 I rent out my property for part of the year

You file the annual return for the days the property was not rented out. You also report the rental income for the days it was let out, between 1 and 20 April.

TWO PARTS, TWO DEADLINES

04 I bought my property this year

If you do not rent it out, your first return is due next year and covers only the days you owned it. Any rental income is reported between 1 and 20 April of the following year.

FIRST RETURN DUE NEXT YEAR

05 I sold my property this year

You still file the annual return for the period up to the date you sold, on the usual timetable the following year. Any rental income is reported between 1 and 20 April of the following year.

When you sell, the buyer keeps back 3% of the price and pays it to the tax office. You then file a return on the sale within four months. Any gain is taxed at 19%, and if the 3% is more than you owe, you can claim the difference back.

How your tax is worked out

If you do not rent out your home, the tax is based on its official value. You only need three numbers.

Cadastral value

This is the official value of your property, the valor catastral. You will find it on the bill for your local property tax, the IBI.

2% or 1.1%

The 2% rate applies as a rule. It drops to 1.1% if your town has revised its cadastral values within the last 10 years.

19% or 24%

Residents of the EU and EEA, including Norway, pay 19%. Everyone else pays 24%, which includes UK residents.

Several owners

Each owner pays tax on their own share and files their own return. Two owners with half each pay half the tax each.

This national tax comes on top of your local IBI tax, which you keep paying to the town hall as usual.

What it looks like in practice

One owner who lives in Norway has a home that was not rented out. The town has not revised its values in the last 10 years.

Cadastral value

This comes from the IBI bill.

€45,986.60Rate applied to the value

There has been no recent revision.

2%Tax rate

The owner lives in the EU/EEA.

19%Days owned

The home was owned all year.

365 of 365Tax due for the year*€174.75

$\text{€}45,986.60 \times 2\% \times 19\% \times 365/365 = \text{€}174.75$

Good to know if you rent out your home

Rental platforms share your income

Airbnb, Vrbo and similar platforms report their hosts' rental income to the Spanish tax office every year. This includes lets arranged by a local agent through these platforms, so always declare this income.

VAT depends on the services you offer

A holiday let with no extra services has been exempt from VAT. If you offer hotel-style services such as laundry, meals or regular cleaning, the rental carries 10% VAT. A decree approved on 29 September 2026 brings 10% VAT to tourist lets of up to 30 nights from 1 December 2026. Parliament still has to confirm it, so check the latest position before you let.

Subletting changes the picture

If an agent or platform can rent out your home without you under a sublease, the rental counts as commercial and carries 21% VAT. Many owners have guests pay them directly, so VAT only applies to the platform's fee.

EU and EEA owners can deduct costs

EU and EEA residents can deduct costs directly linked to the rental, such as IBI, community fees, insurance and repairs, for the days it was let. They then pay 19% on the net amount. The costs are itemised on the return, so keep every invoice. Everyone else, including UK residents, pays 24% on the full rental income.

Check your home country too

Your home country may also tax this income. Spanish tax you have paid can usually be credited, so keep your proof of payment.

Three dates to keep in mind

1 April

From 2027, filing opens for last year's return on homes that are not rented out.

20 April

Rental income from the previous year is reported and paid by this date. File by 15 April to pay by direct debit.

31 December

The return for homes that are not rented out is due by this date. File by 23 December to pay by direct debit.

If a return is filed late

Filing on time is the easiest route. If a return does slip, coming forward yourself always costs less, and paying in full when you file usually cuts the surcharge by 25%.

1% to 12%

If you file up to 12 months late of your own accord, a surcharge of 1% is added, plus 1% for each full month of delay.

15%

If you file more than 12 months late of your own accord, a 15% surcharge is added, plus late-payment interest.

50% or more

If the tax office contacts you first, the penalty starts at 50% of the unpaid tax, on top of the original bill.
