

— YOUR GUIDE TO LETTING

Renting out your Spanish home legally

The licence, your neighbours, your guests and the tax, explained in plain language so that every stay starts on solid ground.

Thinking of letting your home?

Letting a Spanish home can cover its running costs and more. The rules come from three places at once: your region, your community of owners and the national tax office. This guide takes them one at a time, as they stand in October 2026.

The essentials at a glance

- Tourist, seasonal and long-term lets follow different rules, so start by naming the kind of let you offer.
- The national rental register was annulled in 2026, but your regional tourist licence still applies.
- Rental income is declared once a year on the Modelo 210, between 1 and 20 April.

First, know which kind of let you offer

Spanish law treats a summer holiday let, a few months for a visiting worker and a year-long tenancy as three different things. Each one comes with its own rules.

Tourist let

The whole home, furnished and ready to use, marketed through tourist channels such as booking platforms and let for profit. It sits outside the Urban Leases Act and is governed by the tourism law of your region.

Seasonal let

A let for a temporary need, such as a work posting or a period of study. It falls under the Urban Leases Act as a let for a use other than a permanent home, and the regional tourist licence does not apply to it.

Long-term let

A let where the tenant makes the home their permanent residence. If the agreed term is shorter, the tenant can extend it year by year up to five years when the landlord is a private individual.

The name on the contract does not decide the category. What counts is how the home is marketed and how it is actually used.

The tourist licence is regional

Every autonomous community runs its own tourism register. That registration is what a tourist let depends on, and it still applies.

01 Register with your region before the first guest

Registration usually starts with a declaration to the regional tourism authority, the declaración responsable, which gives you a registration number. In the Comunitat Valenciana, you first need a report from the town hall confirming that tourist use fits local planning, and the registration is valid for five years.

DO THIS FIRST

02 Show your number in every advert

Regions such as the Comunitat Valenciana require the registration number in every listing. The EU short-term rental regulation, which has applied since 20 May 2026, also makes platforms display it wherever a registration scheme exists.

03 The national register no longer applies

From 1 July 2025, platforms had to show a number from the national Single Rental Register, the Registro Único de Arrendamientos. In May and June 2026 the Supreme Court annulled the register, finding that the State lacked the power to create it. You no longer need that number or its annual return. Platforms still pass listing data to the authorities through the Digital Single Window.

CHANGED IN 2026

Your community and your guests

Two more sets of rules sit alongside the licence: what your community of owners agrees, and what the authorities need to know about who stays in your home.

New tourist lets need the community's approval

Since the reform of the Horizontal Property Law came into force on 3 April 2025, an owner in a shared building must obtain the express approval of the community before starting a tourist let.

Three fifths decide

Approving, limiting, conditioning or prohibiting tourist lets needs the votes of three fifths of all owners, who must also hold three fifths of the participation quotas.

Existing lets are protected

Owners who were already letting legally under their region's tourism rules before 3 April 2025 can continue. Community agreements do not apply retroactively.

The community can charge more

A community can raise a tourist home's share of the common costs by up to 20%.

Register every guest

Under Royal Decree 933/2021, whoever provides the accommodation sends each guest's details to the Interior Ministry through its SES.HOSPEDAJES service within 24 hours of the booking, the arrival or a cancellation, and keeps the records for three years.

How rental income is taxed

Non-residents declare Spanish rental income on the Modelo 210. Where you live decides what you can deduct.

Costs, days let

EU and EEA residents, including Norway, can deduct costs such as IBI, community fees, insurance, utilities and repairs, in proportion to the days the home was let.

19% or 24%

EU and EEA residents pay 19% on the net figure. Everyone else pays 24% on the full rent.

Days not let

For the rest of the year, the home produces imputed income, declared on a separate return.

Platforms report

Booking platforms report what they paid you, for which property and for how many days, and the data is shared with your home country.

VAT: long-term lets of a home are exempt. In September 2026 the government approved a decree-law setting 10% VAT on tourist lets of up to 30 nights from 1 December 2026, not the 21% first proposed. Congress must confirm it.

05 A WORKED EXAMPLE

Eight weeks of summer guests

One owner who lives in Norway lets a holiday flat for 56 nights in 2026. The figures are illustrative round numbers chosen to show the method.

Rent received 56 nights let through a booking platform.	€8,000
Running costs for the year IBI, community fees, insurance and utilities.	€3,650
Share for the days let 56 of 365 days, which is €10 a day for 56 days.	€560
Net rental income Rent received minus the costs for the days let.	€7,440
Tax rate The owner lives in the EU/EEA.	19%

Tax to declare in April 2027

€1,413.60

$(€8,000 - €3,650 \times 56/365) \times 19\% = €1,413.60$

The dates that matter each year

1 to 15 April

File the Modelo 210 for last year's rental income in this window to pay it by direct debit.

20 April

Last day to file the rental return for the previous year, whether you declare each let separately or all together.

1 April to 31 December

Window for the imputed income return that covers the days your home was not let.

If you let without registering

Fines for tourist lets are set by each region. These are verified examples from the Comunitat Valenciana.

€10,001 to
€100,000

The fine range for a serious infraction under the Valencian tourism law, which includes advertising a tourist home without its registration number.

138 fines

Imposed by Valencia City Council on tourist homes that did not meet the legal requirements, worth more than €1.5 million over 18 months from March 2025.
